

HON. PEDRO R. PIERLUISI
Naturalization Speech
Thursday, July 2, 2009

Hon. José A. Fusté – Chief Judge, U.S. District Court for the District of Puerto Rico
Frances Ríos de Morán, Esq. – Clerk of the Court for the District of Puerto Rico
Joseph Hackbarth – Director, San Juan Field Office, U.S. Citizenship & Immigration Services, and distinguished guest.

I want to begin by extending my warmest congratulations to you all. I am honored to be here with you today especially on the eve of the celebration of the 4th of July. As you celebrate becoming citizens of the United States of America, this Saturday all of us, your fellow citizens, will celebrate the birth of our Nation and the principles of democracy upon which it was founded. Our citizenship is a source of great pride and I share it with you this morning as you become part of the American family.

I have always believed that to be born a citizen of the United States is an invaluable blessing. And to become a U.S. citizen through the naturalization process is a blessing as well. But it is much more than that. You had to sacrifice a great deal to arrive at this moment. You had to struggle for it. You earned it.

This country is not perfect. I know that you are under no illusion that it is. But it is a great country.

America has always been—and it remains today—a work in progress.

And since this country's founding, the hard work of making America better has been carried out by men and women like yourself, immigrants from other shores whose character, passion and talent have continuously enriched the life of this nation and replenished its spirit. This is a great country, and it is a great country precisely because of people like you.

I do not pretend to know what set of circumstances and events led each of you to this ceremony today. Your stories are too diverse and complex to be painted with a single brush.

I am certain that all of you had to leave behind parents, siblings, children, or best friends when you decided to begin the long journey that has culminated in this day.

As you sit here, you may be thinking about these loved ones who could not make the journey with you or who did not live long enough to witness this moment. For that reason, it is only natural that your joy on this occasion may be mixed with a touch of sadness.

But this is a great moment and you should treasure it. And although today is a day to celebrate you, please accept this single piece of advice. When you depart this courthouse as newly minted U.S. citizens, I hope you will resolve to become active citizens.

Register to vote. Make your opinion known to elected officials like myself. Hold us accountable for our actions. Speak out when you see injustice. Volunteer in your community. Consider making public service your profession. In short, do your part to make sure the United States lives up to its ideals. As Abraham Lincoln once said: "I like to see a man proud of the place in which he lives. And I like to see a man live so that his place will be proud of him."

I know that you will continue to lead lives that are worthy of great pride.

Congratulations again on becoming United States citizens.

Bienvenidos a la gran nación americana.

Que Dios los bendiga.
